Seminar paper from the year 2014 in the subject Business economics - Operations Research, grade: 12 = A, Copenhagen Business School (Department of Operations Management), course: Strategy making and value creation by using intangible assets, language: English, abstract: This synopsis aims at applying a number of Intellectual Capital (IC) theories and respective models to the company Gore Tex. Gore Tex, as discussed in the INSEAD case study by Franco et al. (2003), is a company that was founded in 1969 by Bob Gore after the discovery of the isolating properties of expanded polytetrafluoroethylene (ePTFE) materials. This micro porous polymeric film is bonded to a wide range of shell fabric in the textile, cable isolating and medical industry. Liquid water cannot penetrate these pores, but moisture from perspiration can escape. First, the synopsis draws on the paper by Marr (2008) on managing IC to identify key intellectual resources following the five-step management approach. The competitive advantage that can be generated through the use of social capital as stated in the paper by Rumelt (2011) continues the analysis of theoretical concepts and models applied to the Gore Tex case. The key concepts of the Rumelt (2011) paper are further investigated by applying it to the VRIO model by Barney (1995) and its discussion of it by Probst et al. (1998). Furthermore this synopsis uses the SECI model as originally introduced by Nonaka (1991) and picked up by Mouritsen and Larsen (2005) in their paper on the second wave of knowledge management. One example from the Gore Tex case was then implemented in the Kaplan and Norton (1996) Strategy Maps framework to illustrate its practical implications. Finally the learning ladder model by Ciborra and Andreu (2002) completes the analysis of this particular case and synopsis. All these models, frameworks and theories emphasize their practical relevance and applicability and support the notion of a systematic approach towards the management of IC.

Who's afraid of for-profit education? Those who work in non-profit or government owned and operated schools. Many parents and other stakeholders have been made fearful by this education establishment. What's more important to humans: nutrition or education? Nutrition is more important because it is the prerequisite for other human activities, including education. What organizations provide food and who pays for the food? Food is provided by for-profit farmers, for-profit processors, for-profit wholesalers, and for-profit retailers. Most food is purchased with the consumers' own money, but a significant amount is purchased by low-income individuals using food stamps. Why can't education be provided similarly using education stamps? We trust for-profit enterprises to provide our food. Why can't we trust for-profit enterprises to provide K-12 education? Fearmongers have frightened us and made us into gullible compliant socialists who despise commercial activities in education. Go to the supermarket and ponder its marvelous array of foods and then contemplate how a for-profit K-12 education sector would please and amaze its customers.

Universal basic income (UBI) is emerging as one of the most hotly debated issues in development and social protection policy. But what are the features of UBI? What is it meant to achieve? How do we know, and what don't we know, about its performance? What does it take to implement it in practice? Drawing from global evidence, literature, and survey data, this volume provides a framework to elucidate issues and trade-offs in UBI with a view to help inform choices around its appropriateness and feasibility in different contexts. Specifically, the book examines how UBI differs from or complements other social assistance programs in terms of objectives, coverage, incidence, adequacy, incentives, effects on poverty and inequality, financing, political economy, and implementation. It also
