Surprise heart transplant decision. In 2019, Phillips and his family were being told the lifesaving device was failing, raising the difficult prospect of a surgery to replace it. But then came another surprise. His providers at UCH believed that Phillips' best chance for long-term health was a heart transplant. "The equation changed" with the discovery of the blood clot in the LVAD and the risk that posed, as well as the fact that Phillips' PAD had stabilized, Allen explained.
